BLOW IS AIMED AT CAPT. HAINS

seized the accused army officer, and that he stormed and fumed about the house.

The witness said that he saw the captain on the following day and asked him if there would be any objection to Mrs. Hains coming over to remain with himself and wife until such time as she should leave for her home in Massachusetts. The captain had replied in a perfectly rational manner that he had no objection, Lieut. Andrus testified, and the change was made.

Wanted Both Sides.

On the following Tuesday when Mrs. Hains had left the Andrus quarters, Capt. Hains met Lieut. Andrus and had a conversation with him.

"Capt. Hains said to me," testified the lieutenant, "I've heard one side of the story, and I want to hear the other. What did Claudia say to you the other night?"

"I said that she had told me that she had deceived Peter long enough, that she had confessed everything to him and so as to give him good grounds for divorce."

The witness said that these words made no marked impression upon Hains and that his demeanor and speech at this time were beyond the rational.

In his cross-examination of the army officer McIntyre struck at a hitherto unwritten chapter in the history of the days in the Hains quarters at Fort Hamilton following the discovery by the captain of his wife's alleged unfaithfulness.

"In your conversation with Capt. Hains, did you ever say to him: 'It passes my understanding why a woman who is the mother of three children could do such a thing,' the attorney asked."

"I said that in a letter I sent to him," Lieut. Andrus replied. He made other references to that letter in his testimony and the letter in question as made public by the attorney for the defense. This letter throws an added light upon the relations between Hains and his wife and shows the disinterested part played in the tragedy of the accused army captain by Lieut. Andrus and his wife.

"Have just received a letter from father telling me of your visit," reads the introduction, "and my one regret is that I was not present to talk matters over with you. I wouldn't have you think that I am four-flushing for the world, for such is not the case. I am entirely neutral in the matter, although the affair really means more to Mrs. Andrus and myself than to anyone else in the post. You were our best friends there and naturally we wanted and still want to do what is right for you both."

"If I do say it myself, I have acted fairly by you both and if you were acquainted with all the facts and details you would agree with me. In the first place it was a very difficult position in which to be placed. The woman was down, and a few kicks would have sent her into the gutter. You know that as well as I do. I helped Mrs. Hains and her mother to leave Fort Hamilton."

Advice Was Good.

"I think that the advice I gave Mrs. Hains was good, and my only hope is that she will follow it. I have never sympathized with her in her wrongful act, for it is beyond me to comprehend why a woman with three children could do such a thing. Remembering the passage in the Bible which says: 'Let him that hath no sin cast the first stone,' I tried to cheer the poor woman up, and advised her to turn over a new leaf and make amends for the past by living a Christian life henceforth."

The letter continued to say that the writer had been to Boston, and that while there he went to the home of Mrs. Libby to see how Mrs. Hains was doing.

"In this connection I will tell you," the letter continues, "that I dropped in against the advice of my family, but I knew that you were liberal minded in the matter, and know me well enough to know that my intentions in everything are for the best. And if I made any mistakes they have been entirely unintentional, as I have no personal animosity against either of you. If I do say myself, I am very tender-hearted, and am truly sorry for you. I tried to tell you of this on several occasions, but as you didn't desire sympathy, I ceased offering any."

"The only reason I put forth a helping hand was that Mrs. Hains was in such a pitiable condition, and was such a poor, weak woman. You will remember that I told you that I talked to Mrs. Hains on several occasions concerning the way in which she was carrying on, never dreaming that she was doing anything wrong, but merely acting in an indiscreet manner."

Capt. Harden Testifies.

Capt. Joseph S. Harden, stationed at Fort Adams, R. I., was the next witness. He testified to having seen Capt. Hains on three different occasions passing on the government ferry, from Fort Hancock to New York, early in August of last year.

Once, said the witness, an insurance agent on the boat approached Capt. Hains on business, and the captain declined to be involved into taking out a policy. He talked in a rational manner, according to this witness.

Two other officers testified as to the captain's rational action at the time during which the last witnesses had testified to having talked with Capt. Hains was that in which the defense had attempted to show that the captain was so irresponsible as to need the constant attendance of his brother Thornton.

Dr. L. Samuel Manson testified Wednesday that the defendant was suffering from manic depressive insanity during this time.

Discredited Testimony.

In his cross-examination of all the army officers McIntyre tried to prejudice his testimony by showing that they had come to testify against their brother officer willingly and without the service of a subpoena.

All of them insisted that they had acted on communications coming through the office of the commander of the Department of the East. They said that these communications "authorized" them to act in the manner in which they understood this phrase to be tentative to an order.

District Attorney De Witt said after the closing of to-day's session of the court that he had made his request for the appearance of his witness directly through the War Department at Washington, and in two instances when he had received letters from the army officer refusing to come on the ground that they were outside the jurisdiction of his court he had sent those letters on to the department and the department had acted in his favor over the protests of the officers.

THORNTON HAINS CONFIDENT.

Declares Brother Soon Will Be Free and in Washington.

Thornton Jenkins Hains, brother of the man who is on trial at Flushing, L. I., declared yesterday at the home of his father, Gen. Hains, 818 Eighteenth street northwest:

"Capt. Peter C. Hains will never be convicted. The trial will end in a few days, and Capt. Hains will come to Washington a free man. To try a man for his life when he is in the mental and physical condition of Capt. Hains at this time is outrageous. But he will go free and his friends will see him in Washington very shortly."

"The whole trouble came as the result of charges, the foulest kind of charges, that Ann and Capt. Hains' wife cooked up to head off the divorce suit which Capt. Hains was about to bring against his wife."

Thornton Hains does not believe his brother permanently insane.

SAVES HIS LIFE BY PISTOL SHOT

Chemist, Near Death, Crawls to Window, Sounds Alarm.

TOOK OVERDOSE POISON

Used Strychnine as Stimulant During Hard Work.

Neighbors See Him Through Window After Shots Are Fired, and Believe that Burglar Has Slain His Sleeping Victim—Rushed to the Hospital, and Physicians Succeed in Reviving Him After a Hard Fight.

New York, May 6.—Herman Powers, research chemist, and one of the principal heirs of a Harlem contractor, who left more than $1,000,000, saved himself from an agonizing death at his home, 224 West 16th street, at 3 o'clock this morning after he had accidentally swallowed a large dose of strychnine, by shooting his revolver out of the rear window.

Neighbors in 14th street believed it to be an alarm of burglars.

Powers has been suffering from a nervous breakdown for several months, due to overwork. In his scientific investigations he labored day and night, neglecting sleep, exercise, and regular meals, and his health became so impaired that he went to Palm Beach, Fla., for the winter.

Two weeks ago he returned to New York and went to his suite of rooms on the top floor of the 16th street house. The lower floors are occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Stimpson.

Powers was not much improved in health, but went back to work with all the nervous energy he could command.

Risked Even Death.

"I must complete some scientific investigations I am making," he told friends. "The work may cost me my life, but if I succeed in what I propose doing the sacrifice will be worth it."

So right and so mortal. He became so ill a few days ago that Dr. McAlpin was called to administer to him.

"You must give up work," the doctor advised. "You can't live if you don't."

"I'll give up and rest when I have completed this one investigation," answered Powers. "I can't rest with this thing unfinished."

Dr. McAlpin prescribed strychnine tablets, one to be taken three times a day. So engrossed in his work was Powers yesterday that he took double doses of the medicine. He was feeling queer at night when he called to Mrs. Stimpson:

"I have an idea that something is going to happen to me. I seem all nerves."

Took Double Doses.

Powers continued to work until long after midnight. Then he took two more tablets. Almost immediately the nerve centers began to become paralyzed and his muscles contracted. He fell to the floor, but by a strong effort reached the hall door. He beat with all his fast-failing strength on the door, but the sounds were faint. They could not be heard by the family asleep on the lower floors.

Powers felt his strength ebbing fast. He was in agony, and knew that he was dying. He dragged himself to a bureau in his sleeping room in the rear of his laboratory, and got the revolver from an open drawer. Then he began firing. The weapon was discharged twice, the bullets crashing through the window and striking a house in the rear.

When neighbors poked their heads out of the windows they could see in the brilliantly lighted room the figure of a man on the floor. Instantly there was a rush to telephone for a doctor.

"Burglars have just shot a man to death at 224 West 16th street," the first message said. There were other messages of a like nature.

Headquarters ordered the police of the West 16th street headquarters. The reserves under Lieut. Craig hurried to the scene.

Chemist's Life Saved.

Policeman Jerry Concannon was at Amsterdam avenue and 15th street when a taxicab came dashing up.

"There's a man shot to death back here," called the chauffeur.

Concannon drove back to 224 and broke into Powers' rooms. On the floor lay Powers unconscious. In his hand was the revolver.

Concannon shouldered the man and ran to the street, where he hurriedly placed him in the cab to the station house, where it was decided Powers had taken poison. An emetic was administered. Then came Dr. Charlton from J. Hood Wright Hospital, and by applying the stomach pump the chemist's life was saved.

Powers was taken to the hospital. As soon as he is strong enough to be moved, he will be taken to some resort in the South by one of his brothers, and the scientific investigation which has cost him his health and so nearly cost him his life must await completion.

Drowned While Fishing.

Manassas, Va., May 6.—Walter Love, twenty-six years old, son of Phoebe Love, of Dumfries, was drowned at the mouth of Quantico Creek by the sinking of a skiff last evening.

Young Love and two negroes were fishing from the boat when it sprang a leak and began to sink.

Love jumped into the water with the hope of reaching the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Railroad bridge, and was drowned in the attempt.

The negroes held to the overturned boat and reached the bridge in safety.

Pritchard, in the United States Circuit Court, this morning and asked the dismissal of their suits against Judge Robert Prentiss, chairman of the commission, in objection to the rate of 2 cents a mile imposed some time ago by the State.

GIRL'S SLAYER IS CONVICTED

Man Extradited to Edinburgh to Pay Death Penalty.

Ninety-eight Witnesses Called, and Prisoner's Last Life Is Bared.

Edinburgh, May 6.—Oscar Slater, who was extradited from New York on a charge of murdering Miss Marion Gilchrist, of Glasgow, December 8, was found guilty to-day after a trial that lasted four days, and was sentenced to death. Altogether ninety-eight witnesses were called.

The evidence showed that Slater, while posing as a dentist, lived from the proceeds of gambling.

The lord advocate, in the closing speech for the prosecution, dwelt on that fact, and said it proved that Slater had descended to the lowest depths of human degradation, and was quite capable of committing the dastardly deed for which he was being tried.

Andrew Arner, who accompanied Slater to America, testified how Slater had deserted his wife and lived with women. She had understood that Slater went to America because business was bad.

Several witnesses identified Slater as having been lurking in the vicinity of Miss Gilchrist's house for several days before the murder.

Mary Borrowman and Helen Lambie, sister of James Boyle, testified that they identified Slater as the man who was seen leaving the Gilchrist residence immediately after the murder.

GOLF AT GARDEN CITY CLUB

Veteran Travis Beaten in Medal Round Play.

Work of Contestants to Keep With in First Sixteen Interesting.

Whitcomb a Winner.

New York, May 6.—It remained for George Watson to keep the family name to the fore by leading the field in the medal round of the annual invitation tournament on the links of the Garden City Golf Club to-day.

He came to life long enough to return a card of 39, 43-82, just a stroke better than Walter J. Travis, the home club crack, who usually heads the list at these affairs. Watson's triumph was short-lived, as he lost in the first match round to Marshall Whitcomb on the nineteenth green.

The efforts of the contestants to make the first sixteen proved interesting. Fred Herreshoff tied with Max Behr, of Morris County, and P. R. Jennings, of the Home Club, for sixteenth place. They all had scores of 94. In the play off Jennings was eliminated at the first hole, while Herreshoff beat Behr at the next.

At match play Herreshoff lost to Robert Watson after two extra holes, while Behr unexpectedly lost to J. G. B. Lester, of the Royal Dublin Club. The draw brought Travis and George T. Browne together. Travis finally won by three up on the seventeenth green.

Squatters Given Possession of Island.

Special to The Washington Herald.

Richmond, Va., May 6.—Nellie Barnes and Charles E. Jones have partially defeated the scheme of Richmond's electric light system and have been awarded possession of an island in the James River, despite the fact that the city had granted on the island since 1880, and wanted to use the island for a connecting link in the lighting system. Barnes and Jones took possession of the island ten years ago, and have used it for farming and truck purposes since that time.

The city attorney says he will take an appeal.

KIDNAPPER'S WIFE ATTACKED BY MOB

Let's Get Her and Hang Her, One Woman Shouts.

SHERIFFS DISPERSE CROWD

Mrs. Boyle Displays Remarkable Nerve and Threatens to Make Assaultants "Climb a Tree" If They Don't Behave—Husband Convicted of Abducting the Whittia Boy.

Mercer, Pa., May 6.—While being taken from the Mercer County courthouse back to jail this evening by deputy sheriffs Mrs. Helen Boyle was attacked by a mob of perhaps 1,000 persons, mostly women, and it was only by great efforts on the part of the sheriff, business men, and others that the mob was prevented from doing great bodily injury to the woman, who is charged with having kidnapped Willie Whittia, and who was placed on trial here late this afternoon.

James H. Boyle, her alleged husband, had been convicted of kidnapping earlier in the day, and he was being taken from the courthouse to jail with his wife when the demonstration occurred. The mob had gathered for some hours in front of the old schoolhouse, which is doing duty as a courthouse, and when the woman appeared in the custody of Deputy Sheriff Stuart there was a rush made for her, principally by the women.

"Let's Hang Her!" One Shouts.

"There she is; let's get her and hang her. We don't need any jury," screamed a big woman, who seemed a leader.

"Look out, don't come near me, or I'll make you climb a tree," said Mrs. Boyle quietly, as she took a stand. "Why don't you go home and wash your face?" she added, as a final shot.

The mob swarmed around the woman with loud, angry cries, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that the sheriff, aided by several men, could work his way through, and start on the six-square walk to the jail.

The attack on Mrs. Boyle was the finish of a most exciting day. James Boyle was convicted of kidnapping by the court in record time. It took but one hour for the testimony of little Willie Whittia, the kidnapped boy, to convince Messrs. Anderson, Miller, and Stranahan, his counsel, that he had not a chance in the world. They took him out of court and pleaded that he plead guilty, but he would not. They finally convinced him that it was unsafe to go on the stand or make any defense, and so the case was passed to the jury without any defense, and a verdict of guilty was quickly reached. He will be sentenced after the trial of Mrs. Boyle is finished.

Not Concerned by Verdict.

Mrs. Boyle was already in court for her trial when the jury came in with the verdict against her husband. Neither of them changed a muscle as the verdict was received, but hurried themselves looking over the jury list from which a panel was being selected for the trial of the woman.

Mrs. Boyle took a lively interest in picking her own jury. She seemed to have a longing toward young and unmarried men. The jury was finally selected and one witness, Miss Ellen Boyle, sister of James Boyle, placed on the stand, when court adjourned until tomorrow.

BALLOON DID NOT FLY.

Chain Broke and Ascensions Were Postponed Until To-day.

Owing to a minor defect in the engine, discovered as it was being tried out just previous to the intended ascension, the flight of the Army Dirigible No. 1, scheduled for yesterday afternoon, has been postponed. The engine has been overhauled, and it is hoped to have it in readiness for a flight this afternoon.

Many persons had visited Fort Myer in anticipation of witnessing the flight, and their disappointment was keen when they heard it had been postponed. The aeronautical division of the Signal Corps, U. S. A., has long been making preparations for numerous tests in connection with dirigible and aeroplane flights. The experiments will extend over a period of many weeks, and it was intended to begin them yesterday.

To familiarize themselves with the air currents around Washington, the officers have planned a series of flights in the motor balloon. A flight will be made from Fort Myer across the Potomac to the Capitol in order to impress upon Congress the extent of the new wing of the attack of a foreign airship in time of war.

A detail of Signal Corps men had made the great balloon ready yesterday. Its big silver-tinted bag was inflated with hydrogen gas and held down by thousands of pounds of sand ballast. Lieuts. Lahm and Foulois allowed the airship to float midway between the floor and ceiling of the balloon house, and the engine, which arrived on Wednesday, was tried, and after running a short time, the chain connecting the small sprocket on the engine shaft to the large one on the propeller snapped. The link was replaced, but it was found the chain would not stay on the engine sprocket.

The Congressional medal for the Wright brothers is now being designed at the mint in Philadelphia. It will bear profile reliefs of the brothers in the upper left corner, opposite which there will be a small coat of arms of the United States. Below a quotation from the resolution of Congress voting the medals. On the reverse side a portion of the earth's surface will appear at the bottom, above which in the air will be the figure of a cherubim holding aloft a flaming torch.
